

Feedback literacy: From theory to practice

Professor Naomi Winstone
Director, Surrey Institute of Education

 @DocWinstone @SurreyIoE @SurreyLab

Feedback Literacy: past and present

1. Why should we care about feedback literacy?
2. In the context of real classrooms, what does it mean to 'develop' students' feedback literacy?
3. How can we move beyond 'one-size-fits-all' approaches towards discipline-specific feedback literacies?;
4. What contextual barriers to the implementation of feedback literacy exist, and how can these be overcome?

Why even the best feedback can bring out the worst in us

Our minds have many cunning strategies for shunning feedback - but there are ways to avoid these traps, say psychologists Robert Nash and Naomi Winstone.

“rather than us welcoming feedback with open arms, our first response is often a defensive knee-jerk”.

“In the past I've struggled to put my feedback into action, whereas FEATS provides real guidance on how to identify your strengths and weaknesses and then points you to resources to develop your skills. The process feels very organic and personalised.”

“FEATS has taught me that it is essential for us to take responsibility for our own learning.”

“By using FEATS, I have been able to understand and overcome weaknesses in my writing”

Transmission or implementation?

Winstone, Dirkx, Ajjawi & Boud (2021)

- Coded items relating to feedback in 11 surveys from 10 different countries
- Coded for agent of item, key verbs, representation of feedback as product or process, subject of evaluation (e.g. quality, timing), and the implied role of student (passive or active)

Role of student	Frequency	Example
Passive	28	I have received helpful comments on my work. (UK)
Active	4	How often did you: Discuss your academic performance with a faculty member? (USA)

Whose responsibility?

“We're paying for education so it's not our, sort of responsibility to engage with feedback because we're paying for it”

-- Undergraduate Economics student

Winstone, Medland, Bourne, Rees & Niculescu (2020)

“I assume [students] are educated enough to deal constructively with the feedback they receive – otherwise they should not be at my university anyway”
